Four newspaper men, were candidates for office in the territory in the recent election, and only one of them, the editor of a Jerome paper, was elected. It seems to have been about as hard for newspaper men to get office as for the Rough Riders.

The following is a suggestion from the Bulletin :- How would it do for the next legislature to memorialize Congress by resolutions to grant Arizons statehood and pin the resolution to copies of the recent campaign speeches of Gov. Murphy, Charle Wright and Col. Brodie, and forward it to President McKinley at Washing-

All is not peace and love in San Pedro, despite the favorable outlook for the harbor. The News says: "In the last issue of our contemporary the American, the editor of that paper proposes to kiss and make up with the News. May God deliver us from everkissing the insipid lips of the American pencil pusher, We are looking for better game."

It is reported that the Hawaiian mmissioners are in favor of giving he islands a representative in congress with a vote. The Los Angel-Express makes a timely remark that this would be grossly unfair to the territories of Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoms, whose representatives may speak but not vote. ZERAH WESTEROOK'S FLUTE. If Some One Badn't Broken It He

Would Not Bave Been a Big Man. "I see they've elected Zeary West-brook mayor of Amsterdam, up in York A REVISED COPPER LIST. state somewhere," said a Pike ecunty man, referring to Hon. Zerah Westbrook, ex-deputy comptroller of New York and lately judge of Montgomery county. "That shows what a lucky think it was far him that his flute g broken years and years ago up in Si sex county, N. J., the night we went over and gave him a surprise party. "Zeary was born in Sursex county and lived on the form only a few miles from the Delaware, and he came ov into Pike county when he was 16 or 17 to go to school at Milford. He wopopular among us young folks, but order! there wasn't anything also ut im, either of outward show or inwast round prophet in the business to bull the rail fence around that old West brook farm over in Jersey. Some folks went so for us to prophesy that I would come to some bad end, having their forebodings on what seemed to be the all-sufficient fact that he played the flute. He didn't exactly p flute, either. He tensed it. He worried it. He hurled from it staccato trats that jabbed holes in the stilly summer night. He forced from it distressful monnings, gasping gurgles, woeful wails, and wild and despairing shricks. He cut these up into sections and called them tunes. The most despairing, the most hopeless, the most distressing of these was his favorite. He called it 'Napoleon Crossing the Alps!' I never believed it. Napoleon had a bad time crossing the A'ps. but it was rever, never so had as that. People who fore saw his awful finish declare to this day that it would have come long before this if something hadn't happened to arate him from that flute "Zeary quit going to school in Millord after awhile, and thought he could do better by seing back home to help with the pig killing and the chores about the farm, so he took his flute and went, teaving a vacuum in Milford mustent circle that a fife and drum corps falled to fill. Then, after awhile, when the weather got cold and the sleighing good, a lot of us young folks thought we'd take a sleigh ride over to the Westbrook form and give Zeary a surprise party, taking tots of eakes and things along, as was the surprise party custom in these days. That was the coldest night I was ever out in. It was so cold ! over and dumped us all down a terfoot bank, and a pan of custard I had charge of elimbed up on my head turned itself bottom side up, squashed down on my crown, and sat there pecocky as a helmet on a tipsy Trojac soldier, it froze fast before I had recevered from my astonishment sufficiently to take it off, and I either had to be scalped to get away from it or leave it. there until we could get somewhere to thaw it out, and I left it. The girls all had hysterics for awhile, but no one was

"We were only a couple of miles from the Westbrook place when this mishap befell us, and we soon straightened things up and went on. As we neared the cheery lights that glenmed from the Westbrook windows, suddenly the horses pricked up their ears, stopped, and tried to turn round in the read and go back. The driver quieted them down but looked back at us, frightened himself. Then, brought to us on the right wind, we heard sounds of agony-de-

" 'Great Heaven!' exclaimed one of the party; 'have we come here to meet with sickness, and perhaps death?"

"'No,' replied another, who recognized the sounds. 'We haven't, That's only Zeary boosting Napoleon over the

"It was Zeary and his flute, still tempting fate. We soon hustled inside with our surprise, and it was a surprise, too. But even the sight of me frozen fast by my hair to a tin pan couldn't turn Zenry from his course. He had Napoleon at such a critical spot in the Alps that he couldn't leave him ther with safety, and he liept on erossinhim over. He got him to the pinnach of the Alps at last, and east him down on the other side with such an appalling burst from the depths of the flute that one of the girls reached out for more hysteries and got 'em. Then Zeary threw the house wide open. They thawed me out, and we were having a joyful time, when Zeary moved toward the flute again. We were about to order up the horses and fly, but we didn't have to. Somebody or something, somehow, had wreeled the flute. Whether it had been sut on, er jumped on, or what, there it was, broken beyond repair.

"Zeary was sad, but he kept up. He never could get another flute that suited him, and the charm of the farm was broken. He left the place by and by and went up into New York state There he got into polities, and the first thing we heard he had got to be a Judge. and then deputy comptroller of the state. And now he's a mayer. But he'd never have been there if we hadn't gone over to Jersey with our surprise party that night. Zeary ought to affer a reward of maybe $200 to the fellow who broke that flute. I'd just like to make that much about now to kind o' winter over or."-N. Y. Sun.
